ONE CHURCH IS WON.

The Christian Church Pledges Its Best Efforts to Woman Suffrage.

The Christian churches of this county are the first to take a bold stand for woman suffrage. They adopted resolutions in favor of equal suffrage at the county convention yesterday afternoon in North Topeka. Mrs. L. O. Case and Dr. Agnes Haviland appeared before the convention, and asked that if the convention was in favor of woman suffrage, suitable resolutions be passed. The ladies were treated very cordially by those in the convention. The following resolutions were unanimously adopted:

Whereas, Feeling that a crisis has arrived in our nation, and believing that "Whatsoever a man soweth, that shall he also reap," we feel it imperative for us to do what we can to undo the injustice with which over one half of our citizens, and over two-thirds of our church members have been treated for past ages, and

Whereas, That in appreciation of the labors of the sisters, we have passed resolutions of sympathy, and bid them God speed, and they have worked, greatly to the benefit of all objects, for the uplifting of the human race and have accomplished wonders, and

Whereas, Men have had full power to make laws for the government of the state and nation as suit them; but we are not satisfied, and having seen what the women could and have done by their silent influence, we feel that she has been weighed in the balance, and not found wanting. Therefore, be it

Resolved, That we deem it expedient, as well as right, to grant her the right of full suffrage, and for that purpose pledge her, not only our sympathy and our prayers, but our votes, and plead ourselves that we will apply that other saying of Paul not so frequently quoted, as the one we are all so familiar with, that, "Ye, I entreat these also, true yoke fellow, help these women who labored with me in the gospel."

And we will not "Be found wanting" in bearing the banner of "Equal rights to all, and special privileges to none."

THE SHAME OF PHILIP DENE.

HE last guest had said good night, the scrunch of carriage wheels had died away from the long avenue, and was lost amid the silence of the fields. The flowers, waxen white and vivid scarlet, drooped in the hot atmosphere of the oak gallery at Carthage Grange, which an hour before had been filled by a great crowd of county notabilities to honor the birthday of the earl of Carthage's only daughter and heiress, and to hear a piece of news. And yet the announcement of an engagement between Lady Awdry Carstairs and young Philip Dene, the wealthy squire of Hazeldene and Denewood, was no news to a county which for six months past had openly discussed the subject in the hunting field and the ballroom, over the tea-table and at the hair-brushing symposia sacred to the fair sex.

"Good night, my darling," said the countess, kissing her daughter. "Don't stop too long taking farewell of Philip."

Then she swept her violet velvet and rose point from the gallery, whence she was directly followed by a couple of men servants, who had been engaged in extinguishing the tall lamps and wax candles.

In a halo of pale yellow light stood Lady Awdry Carstairs. The soft brown hair of her head was crowned with pearls, which also hung in many gleaming strings around her slender throat. Her white gown fell in full folds to the polished oaken floor where there grew and grew a little heap of white flower petals, pulled slowly one by one by the girl's ungloved fingers from her great bouquet.

Philip Dene, tall, dark, fitted to mate with the fair vision before him, stepped from the shadowed embrasure of an open window.

"Dearest, are you tired?" He spoke softly, bending his curly head above her smooth one.

She waved her hand in negation, but no words came.

"But your sweet face is as white as your gown, and such dark rings have come beneath your eyes during this last hour
